Summary

I have been practicing Traditional Chinese Medicine and acupuncture for over 10 years, with a keen interest in Chinese Medicine classics relating to both treatment paradigms. I use primarily premodern TCM approaches and theories to disease treatment rather than modern renditions of TCM. I continue to see and learn from patients on a daily basis and continue my deepening understanding of the human body and disease from the view of TCM. I also incorporate Western medical diagnostics in my treatment by factoring in lab test and imaging results in my treatment logic. By monitoring such tests before and after I am able to clearly objectify the results of treatments. I hope I will be able to eventually use TCM and acupuncture to effectively and quickly treat most modern diseases of today and use modern testing to prove treatment effectiveness.

In addition I also have interest in politics, economics and social trends and development studies of the Asia Pacific. I am currently in SFU finishing my degree in International Studies focusing on development studies, economics and the environment. I will also be open to another career path in public policy and national development if the opportunity arises as I believe I have creative ideas on solving the current social issues. This stems from my understanding of Western and Eastern philosophy and that both can be combined to create something unique.

I am also currently enhancing my Cantonese skills.
